R-34 on Longest Air Trip Ever Undertaken

THE voyage of the giant British dirigible R-34, already nearly half completed, is the most ambitious journey ever undertaken by any type of acrial craft.

The R-34 set out from East Fortune, Scotland, last Tuesday, at 9:48 p. m., New York time, to fly to Mineola, L. I., and back, a distance of approximately 6,000 miles.

At midnight the dirigible had been in the air 3 days, 2 hours and 12 minutes, skirting storm areas and rising above or passing through fog banks. She seemed capable of remaining slott for many hours longer.

"Foreign investments have been a prolific source of misunderstanding between nations, and, if unregulated, will in the future lead to conditions that may make war unavoidable," Hampton wrote. "We therefore advocate the establishment of an international investment board, whose functions shall
